

Used Vehicle Best Bet for You

February 2020 – Real Simple Magazine

You have kids who are just about to start driving.

If you're worried about an inexperienced teen driver and the high risk of scratches and dings on a new vehicle, buying a preowned car might be your best option.

You can get a one- or two-year old car with 95% of its life left for 20-30% less than a new car. A car that's only a few years old will likely have all the safety features you want for a new driver, like blind-spot monitoring, rearview cameras, and side air-bags, which can lower your insurance bill.

Buying used is especially smart if your new driver has younger brothers and sisters, because then the "kids' car" can be passed down from kid to kid.
